Caregivers equipped with this knowledge can better support their children's individual needs and foster healthy growth.

Infancy (0-12 months)

During infancy, rapid growth occurs in motor skills, sensory awareness, and attachment formation. Babies learn to recognize caregivers, develop basic motor skills such as crawling and sitting, and begin to explore their environment. Understanding these milestones helps caregivers provide appropriate stimulation and safety.

Toddlerhood (1-3 years)

Toddlers experience significant advancement in language development, independence, and social interaction. They begin to assert autonomy, develop vocabulary, and engage in parallel play. Awareness of this stage enables caregivers to encourage exploration while maintaining clear boundaries.

Preschool Age (3-5 years)

This stage is marked by refined motor skills, improved communication, and increased socialization. Preschoolers start to understand rules, develop friendships, and engage in imaginative play. Caregivers can support this growth by providing structured activities and opportunities for creative expression.
