Understanding Basic Craps Bets and Payouts

Basic bets form the foundation of craps gameplay and are the most common wagers placed by players. These include the pass line, don't pass line, come, and don't come bets, each with distinct payout structures and house edges. Familiarity with these bets is essential for any player seeking to leverage a craps payout cheat sheet effectively.

Pass Line Bet

The pass line bet is one of the simplest and most popular wagers in craps. Players bet that the shooter will roll a 7 or 11 on the come-out roll or establish a point and then roll that point again before rolling a 7. The payout for a winning pass line bet is even money (1:1), meaning the player receives the amount wagered as profit.

Don't Pass Line Bet

The don't pass line bet is essentially the opposite of the pass line bet. Players wager that the shooter will roll a 2 or 3 on the come-out roll or establish a point and then roll a 7 before repeating the point. A roll of 12 results in a push. Like the pass line, the payout is even money (1:1).

Come and Don't Come Bets

Similar to the pass and don't pass bets, come and don't come bets can be placed after a point is established. The payout structure mirrors their counterparts, paying even money on wins. These bets also follow the same rules for establishing points and winning or losing.

Summary of Basic Bets

- Pass Line: Pays 1:1, low house edge
- Don't Pass Line: Pays 1:1, slightly lower house edge than pass line
- Come Bet: Pays 1:1, similar to pass line
- Don't Come Bet: Pays 1:1, similar to don't pass line

Odds Bets and Their Importance

Odds bets are unique in craps because they carry no house edge, making them the most favorable wagers in the game. These bets can be placed in addition to pass, don't pass, come, and don't come bets after a point is established. The payouts for odds bets vary depending on the point number.

What Are Odds Bets?

After placing a basic pass or come bet and a point is set, players can place an additional odds bet behind their original wager. This bet pays true odds, which means the payout reflects the actual statistical probability of rolling the point before a 7.

Odds Bet Payouts by Point

The payout ratio for odds bets depends on the point number as follows:

- Point 4 or 10: Pays 2:1
- Point 5 or 9: Pays 3:2

- Point 6 or 8: Pays 6:5

These odds bets significantly increase the expected value of the total wager, as they reduce the house edge on the combined bet.

Double and Triple Odds

Many casinos allow players to place double, triple, or even higher multiples of odds bets behind their original pass or come bets. Increasing odds bets proportionally increases potential payouts without increasing the house edge, making it a strategic move for knowledgeable players.

Proposition Bets and High-Risk Payouts

Proposition bets, also known as prop bets, are single-roll wagers or bets on specific dice outcomes. These bets usually carry a much higher house edge but offer larger payouts, appealing to players seeking high-risk, high-reward opportunities.

Common Proposition Bets

Some of the most popular proposition bets include:

- Any Seven: Pays 4:1 if a 7 is rolled on the next roll.
- Any Craps: Pays 7:1 if a 2, 3, or 12 is rolled.
- Hardways: Pays vary; for example, hard 6 or 8 pays 9:1, hard 4 or 10 pays 7:1. These bets win only if the shooter rolls the pair (e.g., two 3s for hard 6) before rolling a 7 or the corresponding easy way.
- Single Roll Bets: Include bets on specific numbers like snake eyes (2), ace-deuce (3), etc., with payouts ranging from 15:1 to 30:1 depending on the number.

Risks and Rewards of Proposition Bets

While proposition bets offer attractive payouts, their house edge is significantly higher, often exceeding 10%, which makes them less favorable for consistent winning. They are best used sparingly and by players aware of their risk profile.
