The DISC personality model is a widely recognized framework for categorizing human behavior into four distinct types: Dominance, Influence, Steadiness, and Conscientiousness. Developed from the research of psychologist William Marston, this model provides a simple yet powerful way to understand how individuals tend to think, communicate, and respond to challenges. Each DISC type is characterized by specific traits that influence how a person interacts with their environment and others.

The Four DISC Personality Types

Each personality type within the DISC model represents key behavioral tendencies:

- Dominance (D): Focused on results, assertive, and motivated by challenges.
- Influence (I): Social, enthusiastic, and driven by recognition and relationships.
- Steadiness (S): Dependable, patient, and motivated by harmony and cooperation.
- Conscientiousness (C): Detail-oriented, analytical, and motivated by accuracy and quality.

Understanding these types lays the foundation for interpreting the DISC test results effectively.
