Depending on gender and number, "fresco" changes form to agree with the noun it modifies: fresco (masculine singular), fresca (feminine singular), frescos (masculine plural), and frescas (feminine plural).

For example, to describe fresh fruit, one would say fruta fresca. Similarly, fresh air is translated as aire fresco. The word "fresh" in Spanish captures the essence of newness or purity in many cases, just as in English.

Alternative Translations Based on Context

- Nuevo/a: Used for something new or recent, such as "fresh news" (noticias nuevas).
- Reciente: Emphasizes recent origin or occurrence.
