Massage therapy jobs on Indeed are available nationwide, with higher concentrations in urban areas where wellness industries flourish. States with large metropolitan centers often have more opportunities due to increased demand from corporate offices, fitness clubs, and healthcare providers. Many massage therapists work as independent contractors or freelancers, allowing flexibility and control over their schedules. However, some prefer traditional employment that offers benefits such as health insurance, paid time off, and retirement plans. Knowing the different employment types available helps candidates tailor their search and expectations accordingly.

Common Types of Massage Therapy Positions

The massage therapy field encompasses numerous specialties, each with unique techniques and client needs. Indeed reflects this diversity by featuring job openings across a spectrum of massage therapy roles. Understanding these roles assists job seekers in identifying suitable opportunities and preparing for the specific demands of each position.

Indeed listings for medical massage therapy jobs may specify work environments like hospitals, chiropractic clinics, or physical therapy centers.

Spa and Wellness Therapist

Spas and wellness centers seek therapists skilled in relaxation techniques such as Swedish massage, hot stone therapy, and aromatherapy. These jobs emphasize customer service and client experience, often in luxurious or resort settings. Indeed's database includes numerous spa therapist roles, frequently requiring a professional license and experience in hospitality-oriented service.

Sports Massage Therapist

Sports massage therapists specialize in treating athletes by promoting recovery, enhancing performance, and preventing injuries. Programs usually range from 500 to 1,000 hours, depending on state regulations. Indeed job postings commonly specify the need for formal education credentials.

Licensing and Certification

States typically mandate licensure for massage therapists, which involves passing the Massage & Bodywork Licensing Examination (MBLEx) or an equivalent test.
