Overview of the McGill Minor in Management

The McGill minor in management is a supplementary academic program offered to undergraduate students across various faculties. It enables students to acquire foundational knowledge in business management, complementing their primary area of study. The minor is structured to provide a balanced mix of theoretical understanding and practical skills in areas such as marketing, finance, human resources, and organizational strategy. It is particularly beneficial for students aiming to enhance their career prospects by gaining insights into how businesses operate and are managed.

Purpose and Objectives

The primary objective of the McGill minor in management is to equip students with a solid grasp of management principles that can be applied in real-world business scenarios. It aims to develop critical thinking, leadership, and communication skills essential for managerial roles. Moreover, the program encourages interdisciplinary learning, allowing students to integrate management knowledge with their major discipline, thus broadening their academic and professional horizons.

Program Duration and Structure

The minor typically requires completion of a set number of credit hours distributed across core and elective courses. Students usually complete the minor within two to three semesters, depending on their course load and academic planning. The curriculum is designed to be flexible, enabling students to tailor their studies to align with their career goals and interests within the field of management.

Curriculum and Course Requirements

The curriculum of the McGill minor in management encompasses a variety of courses that cover fundamental business topics. These courses are carefully selected to provide a comprehensive understanding of management practices and theories.
