Historical Background of the Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty

The Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty originally refers to a series of agreements signed in 1867 between the United States government and several Native American tribes, including the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Arapaho, and Cheyenne. These treaties were intended to establish peace by relocating tribes to reservations and reducing conflicts on the frontier. The Medicine Lodge Treaty camps were located near Medicine Lodge Creek in Kansas, where tribal leaders and U.S. representatives negotiated terms of coexistence. This historic treaty laid the groundwork for U.S. Native American policy in the late 19th century, although its implementation often faced challenges and controversies.

Context of the Original Treaty

The original Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty emerged during a period of intense conflict and westward expansion in the United States. The U.S. government sought to pacify the Southern Plains by encouraging tribes to live on designated reservations in exchange for annuities and protection. The treaty aimed to halt raids and establish boundaries for tribal lands. However, many Native American leaders saw the treaty as a forced compromise, often signed under pressure or misunderstanding. The legacy of the 1867 treaty includes both cooperation and conflict, shaping Native American relations for decades.

Tribes Involved in the Original Treaty

The treaty involved several prominent tribes:

- Kiowa Tribe
- Comanche Tribe
