Faction Overview and Selection

Choosing the right faction is a crucial step in Medieval II: Total War. Each faction offers unique units, starting positions, and diplomatic relationships, affecting strategic options throughout the campaign. The game features several major factions divided into Western Europe, Eastern Europe, the Middle East, and North Africa.

Western European Factions

Factions such as England, France, and the Holy Roman Empire boast strong heavy cavalry and well-rounded armies. Their economic bases are typically stable, allowing for sustained growth and military expansion.

Eastern European and Middle Eastern Factions

These include the Byzantine Empire, the Seljuks, and the Mongols, each with specialized units like horse archers and unique cavalry types. Their strategic locations require a careful balance of defense and offense, often dealing with nomadic tribes or crusader threats.

Factors Influencing Faction Choice

- Unique unit rosters and strengths
- Starting territory and expansion potential
- Diplomatic relations and enemies
- Difficulty of campaign due to geographic and political challenges

Campaign Map Strategy and Management

Managing the campaign map involves controlling settlements, expanding territory, and maintaining public order. Each settlement produces income, recruits units, and can be upgraded to enhance military or economic capabilities.

Settlement Development

Building infrastructure such as farms, markets, and barracks boosts income and recruitment options. Prioritizing certain buildings depends on the faction's strengths and strategic goals.

Public Order and Rebellion Prevention

Maintaining high public order is critical to prevent revolts. This can be achieved through garrisons, religious buildings, and policies that improve happiness.

Expansion and Conquest

Expanding territory requires careful planning to avoid overextension. Players must balance conquest with consolidation to maintain a stable empire.

Military Units and Army Composition

Understanding the strengths and weaknesses of different unit types is key to creating effective armies. Armies typically consist of infantry, cavalry, missile units, and siege equipment, each serving specific roles.

Infantry Types

Infantry units range from spearmen and swordsmen to heavy infantry. Spearmen are effective against cavalry, while heavy infantry excels in melee combat.

Cavalry Units

Cavalry provides mobility and shock power. Heavy cavalry like knights deliver devastating charges, whereas light cavalry excels in scouting and harassment.

Missile Units

Archers, crossbowmen, and missile cavalry provide ranged damage, crucial for weakening enemy forces before engagement.

Army Composition Tips

1. Include a balanced mix of unit types to cover vulnerabilities.
2. Use spearmen to protect flanks from cavalry charges.
3. Deploy missile units behind infantry for sustained fire.
4. Incorporate cavalry for flanking and pursuit.

Battle Tactics and Combat Tips

Real-time battles in Medieval II: Total War require strategic positioning, timing, and understanding unit capabilities. Mastering these elements can turn the tide of battle.

Formations and Positioning

Using formations such as shield walls or lines can enhance unit effectiveness. Positioning units to protect flanks and high ground gives tactical advantages.

Flanking and Ambushes

Flanking enemy units reduces their morale and effectiveness. Ambushes can surprise and disrupt enemy forces before they form battle lines.

Morale Management

Maintaining troop morale is vital. Avoid unnecessary losses and rout enemy units to cause chain reactions of fleeing soldiers.

Economy and Technology Development

Balancing economic growth and technological advancement supports sustained military campaigns. Income from settlements funds recruitment and building projects, while technology unlocks advanced units and capabilities.

Economic Priorities

Investing in agricultural and commercial buildings increases revenue. Trade agreements and controlling strategic regions further boost the economy.

Technology Trees

Researching military and economic technologies improves unit performance and settlement productivity. Prioritizing technologies depends on current needs and long-term strategy.

Diplomacy and Political Strategies

Diplomatic relations can secure alliances, trade agreements, and peace treaties, influencing the campaign's political landscape. Effective diplomacy reduces the number of enemies and opens opportunities for expansion.

Alliances and Trade

Forming alliances provides military support and deters aggression. Trade agreements increase income and improve relations.

Espionage and Subterfuge

Using spies and assassins can weaken rivals by sabotaging settlements or assassinating key characters.

Siege Warfare Techniques

Sieges are critical in Medieval II: Total War, often determining control over key cities and fortifications. Successful sieges require preparation, proper use of siege equipment, and tactical planning.

Types of Siege Equipment

- Catapults and trebuchets for long-range bombardment
- Battering rams for breaching gates
