Asylum laws are designed to safeguard those who cannot return safely to their country of origin. The concept of political asylum is rooted in international human rights principles and is recognized by many countries worldwide.

Eligibility Criteria for Political Asylum

To qualify for political asylum, applicants must demonstrate that they meet specific legal criteria, including:

- A credible fear of persecution or harm if returned to their home country.
- Persecution based on one of the protected grounds established by law.

- Timely filing of the asylum application, usually within one year of arrival in the host country.

Understanding these eligibility requirements is essential for a successful asylum claim.
