History of the Porsche from Risky Business

The Porsche featured in Risky Business is a Porsche 928, a grand touring sports car introduced by Porsche in 1977. The 928 was developed as a luxury alternative to the iconic Porsche 911, blending high performance with comfort and practicality. By the time Risky Business was filmed in the early 1980s, the 928 had gained recognition for its distinctive design and engineering innovations. The particular model used in the movie was a 1979 Porsche 928, notable for its sleek lines and advanced technology for the era.

This model was chosen to reflect the youthful, rebellious spirit of the film's protagonist, played by Tom Cruise, and to complement the movie's themes of risk and adventure. The car's smooth curves and futuristic aesthetics made it stand out on screen, contributing to its status as a cinematic icon. The Porsche 928 was produced until 1995, but its appearance in Risky Business remains one of its most famous moments in popular culture.

Development Background

The Porsche 928 was designed to be a high-performance grand tourer, combining the power of a sports car with the comfort of a luxury vehicle. Porsche's engineers aimed to create a model that could replace the 911, featuring a front-engine layout with a powerful V8 engine. The 928's design included innovative features such as pop-up headlights and a transaxle for balanced weight distribution.

Significance in the Early 1980s

During the early 1980s, the Porsche 928 was considered a status symbol among affluent car buyers. Its blend of performance, style, and innovation made it a desirable choice for those seeking a premium driving experience. The selection of the 928 for Risky Business reflected this cultural status and helped cement the car's image as a symbol of youthful ambition and sophistication.

Technical Specifications and Features

The Porsche from Risky Business, specifically the 1979 Porsche 928, boasts a range of technical specifications that highlight its advanced engineering. This grand touring coupe combined power, handling, and luxury to deliver a unique driving experience that stood out among sports cars of its time.

Engine and Performance

The 1979 Porsche 928 was equipped with a 4.5-liter V8 engine producing approximately 219 horsepower. This engine was capable of propelling the car from 0 to 60 mph in around 6.5 seconds, impressive for its era and class. The V8 configuration provided smooth power delivery and a distinctive exhaust note, enhancing the driving experience.

Design and Handling

The Porsche 928 featured a front-engine, rear-wheel-drive layout with a transaxle design that improved weight distribution and handling balance. Its hydropneumatic suspension system offered a comfortable yet sporty ride, while the wide, low-profile tires and advanced braking system contributed to precise control and safety.

Interior and Comfort Features

Inside, the 928 was designed with luxury and driver comfort in mind. The cabin included leather upholstery, power windows, and air conditioning—features that were considered high-end at the time. The car's spacious interior and ergonomic seating made it suitable for long-distance touring as well as spirited driving.
