Core Principles and Techniques

The foundation of tashira and dru couples therapy is built on several core principles designed to facilitate connection and healing between partners. These principles underpin the therapeutic techniques used during sessions to promote effective communication and emotional attunement.

Empathetic Communication

Empathy is central to the tashira and dru therapeutic process. Couples are guided to listen actively and respond with understanding, which helps reduce defensiveness and fosters mutual respect. This emphasis on empathy encourages partners to validate each other's experiences and emotions.

Emotional Awareness and Regulation

The therapy provides tools for self-regulation, allowing individuals to approach difficult conversations with calmness and clarity.
