Each tribe occupies a specific territory and possesses abilities adapted to their environment. This section provides a detailed overview of these tribes and their defining features.

MudWings

MudWings are known for their strength and resilience. They live in swampy, muddy regions and have thick, durable scales that protect them in battle. Their ability to breathe fire is weaker compared to other tribes, but they compensate with physical power and endurance. MudWings are often portrayed as loyal and protective of their kin.

SandWings

Their fire-breathing ability is among the strongest, making them a dominant force within the dragon world. SkyWings value honor and strength in battle.

SeaWings

They have webbed talons for swimming and can breathe underwater. SeaWings are skilled hunters and have a rich culture centered on the sea and its mysteries.

IceWings

IceWings reside in frigid polar regions and possess the ability to breathe ice or freezing blasts. Their scales are often pale blue or white, providing camouflage in snowy environments. IceWings are known for their strict social order and powerful magic. Their environment has shaped them into strategic and resilient dragons.

RainWings

RainWings live in lush, tropical rainforests and are recognized for their vibrant, color-changing scales. Their venom is unique as it can cause paralysis, and they have a peaceful disposition. RainWings' adaptability and camouflage abilities make them excellent at avoiding conflict, often choosing diplomacy over combat.
